Review: at least one third of people report persistent memory loss after electroconvulsive therapy

While there is no doubting the effectiveness of ECT, patients’ perspectives do need to be explored in different ways. While qualitative studies go some way to doing this, we are at a point in our knowledge where this systematic attempt by Rose and colleagues can be used as a spur to design combined qualitative and quantitative studies of greater validity.

Leslie F Koopowitz MBBCh FFPsych(SA) FRANZCP
Senior Consultant Psychiatrist, Royal Adelaide Hospital, Glenside Campus, and Clinical Senior, Lecturer in Psychiatry, University of Adelaide, Adelaide, Australia